Calves in the Fall.

National Stockman.]
The practice with many Western farmers is to allow the calves more or less milk until early in the Fall, when they are weaned and fed by ter to stunt the calf at this time, of order. and while good feed and care may in a great measure eradicate the principal effects, yet it costs more time and extra feed in the end than is saved at the start, while very often the effects are never entirely

Like stock of any kind it is much easier to allow calves to lose than to keep up a gain, but the most profitable plan is to feed and care so that a good steady gain can be kept up. It may take some more feed to do this than to just feed enough to keep them alive, but the better growth secured will more than make this up

Early in the Fall is the best time for feeding them into a good condition, while the weather is coo and before cold weather sets in. And when once in a good condition It is not a difficult matter to keep

To keep them warm and comfortable is one very important item in keeping them in a good condition as economically as possible, and to do this shelter should be provided ahead. It is bad enough to allow old stock that have been expected. old stock that have been toughtened to it (such a thing is possible) to be exposed to all kinds of weather; but it is worse for young stock, so much so that it is simply no economy whatever to attempt to winter m without providing good shel-

And this work should be attended to early. There is nothing saved by waiting. The shelter should be ahead of the first storm; this is the only safe plan. We know by our own experience that the first storm that comes in the Fall, or the first cold weather that comes, we feel much werse than after we get some-what accustomed to it. And stock are affected in the same way; and for this reason we should prepare and see that the shelter is all ready when the stock need it.

This will make considerable dif-

This will make considerable difference in the quantity of feed required, and especially with grain. In fact if good, dry, warm shelter is provided a very small amount of grain will be needed; while if unprotected considerable grain must be given to keep up animal heat.

By running the hay through a good cutting-box, and mixing an average of one pint of bran for each calf per day, and feeding the calves, they can be kept in a first-class condition, and that very economically—certainly at a less cost than to attempt to feed through on corn without shelter, and especially this without shelter, and especially this Winter, when the prospects are that corn will be in good demand at fair prices. Corn fodder can be given and a less quantity of hay, as wheat straw can be cut and mixed with the hay; but the quantity of bran should not be lessened.

Calves should be fed and watered regularly. This of course is an important item with stock of all kinds; and if attended to regularly, provided with good bedding and kept warm and comfortable, they will keep growing all Winter, and will be well worth sufficiently more to pay well for the feed and care.

A Hereford Breeding Farm. It is not generally known that in Nevada there is a breeding farm at which the raising and breeding of Hereford cattle from the choicest strains is made a specialty of, but the firm of Joseph Scott & Co., of Halleck, Elko county, is entitled to the distinction of being not only In order to give all a chance to test it, and thus be convinced of its wonderful curative powers, Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption coughs and colds will be, for a limited time, given away. This offer is not only liberal, but shows unbounded faith in the merits of this great remedy. All who suffer from coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, bronchitis or any affection of the throat, chest or lungs, are especially requested to call at 8. J. THE attentive reader of labor platforms will notice that in many instances they urge the adoption of a great number and variety of reforms, real or supposed, instead of concentrating the strength of the workingmen upon a few measures regarded as of prime importance. suggested by Mr. Powderly in his the Knights of Labor at Minnespolis. He recommended that the Knights of Labor should go before the next Congress asking for the passage of but one or two measures, and those important ones, so that the whole strength of the organization should be concentrated behind those making the demand. The two measures suggested by him were the creation of a department of labor and the establishment of a system of Government telegraphy to be run in connection with the postal service. Whatever may be the fate of those particular measures, remarks Bradstreet's, there can be no doubt of the soundness, from his point of view, of Mr. Powderly's solvice to the Knights.

THE coinage of silver continues, and the country prospers. Two do business in Texas. Attorney Genyears ago dire predictions were made by gold bugs in Wall street and heralded abroad by President Cleveland and Secretary Manning, that unless the white metal ceased to be a part of our monetary system financial ruin and disaster would result to the nation. But the coinage goes steadily on, and the howlers have evidently sought and found their holes. The East, West, North and South are enjoying unusual prosperity, and the signs of the times point to a continuance of the same. With all the "cussin" it has received, silver continues to hold its place in the markets of the world. At the present time it is firm and steady, with very slight variations in quotations for bars. A Fast Train to Mexico.

MEXICO, Oct. 14.-It is announced that Huntington's international railroad, which runs from Eagle Pass, s road, which runs from Eagle Pass, a point on the Ceutral Railroad, will be completed next month, that the rolling stock will be ready in January and that a fast mail service between New York and Mexico can then be had. It is said that if quicker time can be had on the immediately connecting road, the time between the City of Mexico and New York will be reduced for passengers and mails to four days and a half. This would be a gain of three days and a half over the present time.

The Kouts Horror.

VALPARAISO, Ind., Oct. 14 .- The verdict of the Coroner's inquest at the Kouts disaster is: "The accident was the result of negligence of the train dispatcher in permitting the passenger train to attempt to run with a disabled engine, knowing that the fast freight train was but a few minutes' behind it, and by the negligence or carelessness of Engineer Dorsey, of the freight train, running his engine at a high rate of speed through a fog, knowing the passenger train was but a short distance in advance, with a disabled engine."

courses on the Political Situa-tion-Work for Congress. Senator Wm. M. Stewart arrived from San Francisco this morning, looking hale and hearty, and enthusiastic over the various measures he proposes to call the attention of Congress to next session. In conversation with a GAZETTE reporter he said that he would endeavor to have an appropriation made for a hydrographic and topographic survey of Nevada, which would be the preliminary step towards the erection of a system of storage reservoirs throughout the state. The State Grange of Cali-fornia is also moving in the same direction, and from the present out-look the Senator believes that the look the Senator believes that the Pacific Coast delegation will present a solid front in regard to this all important question. If successful in having the appropriation passed and the surveys made, the future of Nevada as an agricultural State is assured.

In regard to the political pot, which is now beginning to simmer, the Senator was reticent, giving as a reason that it was too early for him or any one else to name the fortunate man who will lead the Republican party next year. He was confident of victory, however, and stated that in his opinion New York would give an overwhelming majority for the choice of the Republican party. As to the Pacific Coast he said there could be no doubt. The great inflx of Eastern people into California, Orego 1 and Washington Territory during the past two years had entirely changed the political complexion of the Coast, and a majority for the Re-publican candidate was an assured fact.

A few words and a description of the grand Mikado party given at Wadsworth on Friday evening, October 7th, 1887, would not be amiss. The party was under the direct management of Mrs. J. H. Whithed and Miss Laura Angus. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and not even standing room could be had. The costumes were gotten up in elegant style and remarkably good taste. Visitors as well as residents were well satiswith the result. The hall was very brilliantly lighted, and together with an artistically canvassed floor, a rayal Japanese tea, nothing more was needed to make it the most enjoyable affair of the season. I will also add the flattering smiles of the fair sex fairly carried the hearts of our young men by storm. The music, under the direction of Mr. Hastings, of Reno, and ably assisted by Miss Cora Ferguson, was excellent in every particular, and many were the praises in their behalf.

Promptly at 9:45 the band struck up the grand march, which was led by Mr. Ed. Culver and Miss Laura Angus. Of the Committee on Decorations, which consisted of Messrs. Woods and Culver, Mrs. Whited and Miss Angus, too much cannot be said in their praise. And the prompt and exquisite management of the floor is due to N. A. Hummel and Mr. Will Dunlope. The Mikado was represented by Clark Woods in character dress. He sustained his part well.

The Wadsworth ladies all appeared in Mikado dress, and no spectators were allowed to dance during the entire evening. Mrs. Ed. Fowler assisted as door-keeper and made a fine one, so much so

It is singular how soon a plain, unassuming tenderfoot becomes an experienced miner and mountaineer—in his mind—and how soon he begins to converse about difficult and dangerous terms in mining. He begins in two days to talk about blossom rock, surface indications and float. Inside a week he converses freely on the subject of "colors, milling ore, refractory ore, contact, copper stains, carbonate formations, dips, spurs, variations, assessment work, ore on its dump, ore in sight, mill runs, true fissures, mineral in place, pyrites of poverty, sulphates of disappointment," etc.

One summer day I went out into the mountains with hope springing eternal in my breast. I did not tell any one what my scheme was, but I fully intended to wrest a comfortable fortune from the bowels of the earth. As I write these lines, I learn that the aforesaid bowels remain intact.

There were two of us in the expedition, and our bedding consisted mostly of two patchwork quilts. Old hardened miners do not travel through the mountains with patchwork bed quilts, unless they desire to promulgate their fresh and guile-less natures.

We labored under the delusion

We labored under the delusion that hunting for gold and hunting for black berries was a good deal similar, but it is not. Nothing could be less

We hunted for two weeks before we found anything that looked like gold, and our supply of toothsome viands was beginning to get low. How well I remember the beautiful day that I found my first nugget in the bed of an old stream in a wild and rocky gulch. There was a little water standing in a slight depression of the gulch. There was a little water standing in a slight depression of the gravel, and in this little puddle lay my nugget! It was a pebble as large as a robin's egg, literally full of yellow, glittering metal, that made ray heart jump around in my throat in a most tumultuous manner. I examined the little pool of water more carefully and found another larger and even richer nugget. I was crazy. I began to feel arrogant and purse proud. I knew what it was to look down on the poor. I sat down on a big boulder and tried to look upon my former associates in the same way former associates in the same way that I did before my prosperity had come upon me. I began to invest my money where it would be safe and still yield me a fair interest.

By and by I began to get hungry.

I went down to camp and ate a little fried salt pork that had been left over from the midday banquet. I showed the bonanza to my partner, and told him that he had better take the gold and go into town for more grub. He did so. Two days passed and I toiled on. My partner did not return. A horrible fear care upon me. Perhaps he had taken the proceeds of my partners and proceeds of my partners and proceeds. me. Perhaps he had taken die proceeds of my nuggets and meandered away to some other clime. I could not endure the uncertainty, and started out for town. He was not there. He had fied. I inquired everywhere, but could learn nothing of him till I went to an outfitting place, where one of the clerks said that a man answering to the description of where one of the clerks said that a man answering to the description of my partner had been seen there a few days before and tried to "trade some fool gold for grub," he said. And the boys had told him to leave town inside of thirty minutes or they would hang him, and probably he had skipped.

Then I asked him what "fool gold" was and he told me. It is generally

Then I asked him what "fool gold" was, and he told me. It is generally a streak of yellow mica that runs through a pebble and under water looks like gold, only a little too bright. He said that from the number of these nuggets that had been brought in that season he judged that the fool killer must have been drawn on a jury somewhere and prevented from attending to routine business.

Admiral Foote and the Gun-Boats

"In the railway train a gentleman who sat in front of me, learning that I had constructed Foote's vessels, introduced himself as Judge Foote, introduced himself as Judge Foote, of Cleveland, a brother of the Admiral. Among other interesting matters, he related an anecdote of one of his little daughters who was just learning to read. After the capture of Fort Henry the squadron was brought back to Cairo for repairs, and on the Sunday following, the crews, with their gallant flag-officer, attended one of the churches in Cairo. Admiral Foote was a thorough Christian ed one of the churches in Cairo. Admiral Foote was a thorough Christian gentleman and excellent impromptu speaker. Upon this occasion, after the congregation had assembled, some one whispered to him that the minister was ill and would be unable to officiate whereupon the Admiral to officiate; whereupon the Admiral went up into the pulpit himself, and after the usual prayer and hymn, he selected as the text John xiv, 1, 'Let not your heart be troubled; ye be-lieve in God believe also in me.' Upon this text he delivered what was declared to be an excellent serwas declared to be an excellent ser-mon, or exhortation, after which he dismissed the congregation. An ac-count of the sermon was widely pub-lished in the papers at the time, and came into the hands of the little niece just referred to. After she had read it, she exclaimed to her father:

"'Uncle Foote did not say that right? right.' Say what right?' asked the father.

"'Why, when he preached.'

"'What did he say?'

"'He said, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me."'

"'Well, what should be have said?'
inquired the father.
"'Well, he ought to have said,
"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in the gun-boats."'"

The Congo basin, as now defined, is based upon the proposition made by the American members of the conference, and takes in a strip of territory stretching from the west coast across the continent to the Indian Ocean, with a littoral of 385 miles, i. e. from Ambriz to the French Gaboon frontier, on the Atlantic side, and a coast front of thirteen degrees, or 780 miles on the Indian Ocean. The principal side of the question, however, in this discussion pertains, of course, to the Atlantic littoral, as being the accessible one, and the natural geographical avenue of trade from and to Europe.

Hussey's Remedy

Eighteen hundred vears ago the latter part of this month there occurred one of the grandest tragedies ever recorded on the pages of history. Two growing cities peopled with a busy populace, imbued with the thoughtless security that a temporal regime presented, basked under Italian skies on the sunny slopes of Vesuvius. In the blaze of national glory they lived beneath the proud standard of the Roman empire, and that was their life's chiefest honor. Beyond the mere animal existence, their only cares were personal comfort and pleasure, to both of which they resigned all future anticipations. The afternoon approaches with sultry steps, and the population seeks the refreshing baths to stir their drowsy natures and innervate them for the walk to the Coliseum, at the extreme southwestern corner of the city. The neighboring city of Herculaneum and suburban villages send their quota to the great stone auditorium, and thousands upon thousands flock thither to sate their depraved taste in the fiendish exhibition. The story of that awful night, and the week's continuous storm of burning ashes, was written in a book that remained unopened for seventeen centuries. Pliny, the younger, left the only account of the wonderful scene, of which he was an eye-witness, wherein he describes the accident which led his uncle, Pliny, the elder, to visit Pompeii on the day of the eruption, and caused his death. Herculaneum, nearer the crater, was NEW ESTABLISHMENT, Herculaneum, nearer the crater, was buried in the molten lava, which formed an almost impenetrable envelope to the lost city. the Southern girl who sent President Cleveland the four leaf clover she had found, the New York Times points out that luck is not transferable.

That finding a four-leaved clover brings good luck is universally conceded. The luck, however, is limited to the finder, and is not negotiable. The same is true of horseshoes. The man who finds a horseshoe in the road man who finds a horseshoes. The man who finds a horseshoe in the road should be envied even by the holder of half a million dollars' worth of mining stock, but he can no more convey his good luck to another man by giving him the horseshoe than the by giving him the horseshoe than the owner of the mining stock can enrich his creditors by assigning the stock to them. The finder of horseshoes or four-leaved clovers can destroy his own luck by giving them away and thus insulting fortune, but he cannot convey to another the luck which he himself rejects. Print Cloth Consumption, It is remarkable to notice what a falling off there has been in the use of print cloth for dresses and other kinds of wear, as compared with twelve or fourteen years ago. At that time, when prints were selling for from nine to twelve cents per yard, print dresses were very much worn in the summer time by the good housewives and their children in our New England towns and cities; while at the present time you can scarcely see England towns and cities; while at the present time you can scarcely see a woman or child wearing print goods, although they can be purchased for from three and a half to four cents per yard. This does not seem to corre-spond with the theory that lowering the price of goods increases their con-sumption; but in this particular instance it has acted quite to the con-trary.

There is no country in the far East in which holidays and festal seasons are so numerous and where they are so enthusiastically observed by the common people as they are in Siam. All classes participate in the public celebration and king and peasant forget their relative rank amid the general delirium of joy.

Only two years ago his Majesty, the second King of Siam, although a sincere Buddhist, opened the doors of his palace on Christmas day and invited the missionaries and their friends to a grand royal feast which was given in honor of the occasion. It was the first Christmas festival ever held in an Oriental palace, and the entertainment was in every respect worthy of their enlightened ruler. One of his Majesty's guests thus describes the royal banquet and the evening entertainment:

"On the day of the feast or rather."

the evening entertainment:
"On the day of the feast, or rather evening, for in the East dinner among evening, for in the East dinner among the denizens of uppertendom always comes after sunset, we all met at the palace, which was in such a blaze of light, from moat to turrets, as to be visible for miles away on the river. The royal host received his guests with graceful courtesy, and did the honors with the ease and polish of a Beau Brummel. He wore on the occasion a dark-blue full-dress naval uniform, with epaulettes and buttons uniform, with epaulettes and buttons of pure gold—a dress peculiarly suited to his erect figure and compact form. He occupied the head of his table, with an American lady at the side; and one of the resident missionaries, who sat at the other end of the board, said grace in the English language. The room was brilliantly il-luminated with wax candles, and the table fairly aglow with the sheen of massive gold and silver plate and the glitter of costly glass. The first course consisted of four varieties of soup, vis.: Oyster, turtle, bird's nest and genuine Oriental chowdah, such as is never imbibed this side the Cape of Good Hope. Next came fish, in many varieties; then innumerable courses of meats; and, lastly, the inevitable concomit-ant of all Oriental dinners, rice and curry. Then the cloth was removed and the desert, already described, brought on. This having been fully discussed, the fruit course succeeded, embracing forty or fifty varieties of fresh, ripe, luscious fruits, such as one sees nowhere but in the tropics, as they are gathered fresh from the tree, all gemmed with fragrant dew.

"After dinner there were fireworks in great variety—sky-rockets, fire-wheels, flying-fish and Roman can-dles—the finest I have ever seen, lighting up the very house with bril-liancy. The royal bands were next summoned, and we were regaled with summoned, and we were regaled with music, both vocal and instrumental; some of it very good, especially the Laos organ, accompanied by several splendid soprano voices, and I think the finest alto I have ever heard. Various other amusements followed, among them a single combat in which I was much interested—a trial of skill between two youthful knights. The effort was to unhorse, not to wound. The young men were both wound. The young men were both of noble presence, and apparently very evenly matched, as nearly an hour elapsed before any advantage was gained by either.

"At last the victory was decided by an accident, the breaking of the sword of one of the combatants; an advantage of which he dexterously availed himself, though he magnanteconstitutions of the combatants." imously threw away his own weapon before bearing down on his advercomplete, and a jeweled sword of great value was his reward, presented by his Majesty in propria personæ. The youthful aspirant bowed low be-fore his royal patron, and uttered his thanks in a low, reverent tone; then turned to his rival, and, with a courteous 'Never mind, you may be the next victor,' they went out, apparent-ly as good friends as ever. "We soon after bade our noble host good night, and retired as we had good night, and retired as we had come, in the stage barges of his Majesty—and so ended our pleasant-ly-to-be-remembered Christmas at this royal place."

quired until the pecuniary obligation is discharged. The owner may also exact interest on the amount of indebtedness at the rate of fifteen percent. per annum, but no more, as this is the highest rate the King permits his subjects to charge. If a greater sum is demanded, and the fact can be established by acceptable testimony in a native court, the debt is canceled and the slave becomes free. If for any reason he becomes dissatisfied with his owner, or master, which is often the case, he may secure another one by transferring the deed, without asking the consent of the owner, provided the redempti— or "taking over" (as the Siamese express the transaction) is made in pursuance of law. If he can prove to the satisfaction of the District Judge that his wife possesses the requisite amount, he may apply to the court for an order compelling her to pay the debt and thus redeem him from servitude; but inasmuch as the government is not supposed to encourage gambling with a wife's money, the law requires that the assignment of the san kramatan shall be made to the wife; so that, when possessed of this formidable document, with the official seal duly attached, she becomes the absolute and bona fide owner of her husband by an indisputable title which nothing but a royal decree can possibly annul.

The Principal exercises a fatherly care and discipline over the pupils, seeking to influence and kindly lead rather than drive. The military discipline is used in a modified form, sufficient to secure regular exercise and erect carriage by drill, and habits of promptness and obedience, with orderly movements in the school-roem, Experience has proved that the military drill, thus modified, is beneficial and not objectionable. Particular attention is given to the morals and munners of the pupils by both principal and teachers, it being considered an indispensible part of their training to make them gentlemen as well as schoolars.
